DR. KANZLER ENTERS SERVICES OF THE U. S. ARMY

Having received a commission as first lieutenant in the medical corps of the United States army, Dr. Reinhold Kanzler is completing arrangements to leave immediately to take up his new duties. He is to specialize on stomach and intestinal disorders, but does not know where he will be stationed.

Dr. Kanzler is the third of his family to volunteer in the service of the United States. His brother, Captain Jacob Kanzler, has been recommended as director of military training and science in the University of Oregon.

A second brother, Lieut. Fred Kanzler is from Salt Lake and has been in charge of the buying of spruce in the timber belt of the northwest, where he made a record which brought him high praise from his superior. He is now in Portland, awaiting assignment. His wife is the daughter of Jacob Johnson, former congressman from Utah.

The Kanzler boys were born in Kearney, Neb., and, though of German parentage, are among the most enthusiastic of loyal Americans. They are resolved to do their part in the cause of democracy.

Dr. Kanzler is one of Ogden's most prominent medical men and has served as city physician. The family will

CASE OF VICIOUS DOG IS UNDECIDED

The case of the city against Louis Zappacosta, manager of the Ogden Macaroni company, on a charge of keeping a vicious dog which he is alleged to have allowed to run at large, was resumed in the municipal court this morning.

Amos I. Stone, who was bitten by the dog as it lay chained to the side of the factory, was the complaining witness, though there were many witnesses who testified to having been attacked at one time or another. The testimony was taken about a week ago when the case was tried and Judge George S. Barker continued the case in order to permit counsel for the macaroni concern to come up from Salt Lake to argue the legal points involved. The case was reopened this morning in order to allow counsel to cross examine witnesses. The case has been taken under advisement.

NURSE FROM WAR ZONE TELLS THE STANDARD WHAT SHE SAW IN EARLY MONTHS OF SLAUGHTER

Miss Kathleen X. Phillips, a British Red Cross nurse who is making a tour of the United States and will speak at the tabernacle under the auspices of the All-British society of Ogden, arrived in this city yesterday and is at the Reed hotel. Miss Phillips was in South Africa when the war broke out, but she proceeded at once to London and took service in France. She has served in both the British and French hospitals and knows the conditions that have existed in France since the beginning of the war. She is a most interesting woman, as reported from the cities she has visited to be an eloquent speaker. She will speak here in the interest of the Red Cross, and will address an audience at the Presbyterian church at 8:15 next Wednesday evening. Rev. Godfrey Matthews will preside.

Miss Phillips works without pay and pays her own expenses. She did this even when serving in France.

Miss Phillips, interviewed by a representative of The Standard concerning her war work, said:

At Outbreak of War.

"I entered the service as quickly as I could get to France after the outbreak of the war, and I found conditions there simply indescribable. 'They are different now. Wounded men get every possible attention, once they get to the base hospital. There is plenty of equipment and an abundance of supplies. But in the early days such was not the case. Then we had to care for thousands with supplies only for hundreds. Added to this there were tons of thousands of refugees from invaded France and Belgium. They had to be cared for. The Germans in those days tried by a desperate stroke to so paralyze their enemies that they would win quickly. So they did anything and everything to gain their ends.

"There is no describing the duties of a nurse in France. Men come to us in unspeakable condition from their wounds. The modern shrapnel is so terrible in its execution that soldiers frequently are reduced to a mass of pulp. There isn't enough left to bury. Even the tin identification tags are destroyed, so that we can't tell who they were.

"You can imagine the condition that the wounded men still alive are in when they reach the base hospitals. The worst cases die, of course; but they must be given every attention. I can't tell you what those wounds are. They can't be described—whole sections of flesh torn away.

Millions of Graves.

"The dead exceed the wounded in the British and French casualty lists. I know that this seems like an exaggerated statement, but it is true. There are millions of graves in France and England, designated by the little white wooden crosses as the graves of soldiers. The wholesale slaughter which this war has produced is beyond all calculation. It will be years after the war before the total can even be approximated."

Miss Phillips says that the British Red Cross is entirely on a volunteer basis, and is distinguished from the Queen Alexandra Imperial Military Nursing service, which is operated much as the American Red Cross.

Members of the imperial military nursing service she says, are on a pay basis and are lavishly supplied with all the equipment necessary to carry on their work. They are well paid and under military discipline.

No Joy Riders.

"The war has come closer to the people of Great Britain than to the people of the United States," she said. "There has been no such thing as a joy ride in England since the ninth month of the war. Recreations and amusements are practically taboo. The theaters are run for the soldiers more than for the civilians.

"I will venture to say there is not a pair of silk stockings being worn in England or Great Britain at the present time. Only the plainest of clothes are the fashion—especially among the women. It is considered a disgrace for any one to cater to sartorial fashion in the least degree. There is but one fashion, in fact—and that is of severe plainness.

"British women at this time are going on half good rations, all over the JUDGE these clothes by the men who wear them and you'll appreciate their true quality. The tailoring, the woollens, and the values are standards by which other clothes are judged. That may sound like the average advertised statement, but unfortunately we have only ordinary words to describe these extra-ordinary clothes.

empire, in order that the soldiers engaged in the great defensive against the German drive shall have an abundance of food to eat. The full rations at present constitute just about enough for normal nourishment. You can imagine what a prolonged season of half rations will mean. The women have adopted it voluntarily, just as they do everything else. They feel it is necessary.

"There is not the slightest feeling in Great Britain—nor in France—to bring the war to an end before Germany is whipped.

"The brutalism, obstinacy and domineering character of the German people cannot be exaggerated. They are a dangerous, treacherous race. This country is full of them, who would go back to Germany at a moment's notice and fight the land of their adoption. Make no mistake about this. They have been shown up in their true colors."

But Miss Phillips did not preach a doctrine of hate. She said that would be a dangerous thing to do.
